1/2 of a sonnet

Remy Sutherland

For the past six months, my bed unmade,
So does my life undo, where you once laid.
For memory believes before remembers knowing,
I'll do half; my heart's backward growing.

You thought I'd come through, I'd finish well,
But I would never claim to do the best I can.
And though no one will see and no one will tell,
Here lies half a sonnet, by half of a man.
