About the Authors

Aleksandra Bril, Pitzer College, Class of 2013, is an immigrant from Moldova, arriving in the States at the eager age of two to eat bananas and live the good life. Her formal academic pursuits lie within the fields of Environmental Analysis and Linguistics.

Hunter Brooks Dukes, Pomona College, Class of 2013, majored in English with a concentration in literary theory. His research interests include Samuel Beckett, the philosophical significance of jug-like vessels, and the distinction between objects and things. He will be attending King's College, Cambridge, in Fall 2013.

Rebecca Green, Harvey Mudd College, Class of 2011, majored in Computer Science, with a focus in Artificial Intelligence. She works as a software engineer for a startup in Palo Alto, lives with two adorable kittens, and plans to continue her studies in AI and Human-Computer Interaction at some point in the future.

Katy Keisling, Scripps College, Class of 2015, is a Latin American Studies major and a Politics and International Relations minor. She is fascinated by the illuminating effect literature can have on social and political tensions throughout a nation's history. Katy will be studying abroad in Peru in Fall 2013, and plans to spend several years living and working in Latin America after college. She hopes her life path allows her the pleasure to indulge in many excellent cups of coffee, and many, many good books.
