Global Community Collaboration – Developing PD Materials

- Research Topic: Quality of professional development (PD) learning engagements in the International Baccalaureate (IB) Diploma Programme (DP) Psychology workshops. Research Question: To what extent do IB psychology teachers, located globally, find the online and face-to-face workshops helpful in providing resources and strategies for teaching and assessing student learning? Be right back...

- I've decided to focus on learning more about supporting new teachers for my CEnR project. I took down my earlier post that proposed research questions related to mental health. If you came here expecting to read my research questions—come back later this weekend and I'll have the new info up!... Read More

Research

- Revising the language of federal research policy from the passive “subjects” to “participants” seems right. “Participants” is more democratic, more respectful of all members of the research partnership, and it’s a useful reminder of the potential for the agency of all parties as research conventions change and become more inclusive. I also agree with replacing ... Continue reading Intellection: Research Ethics Reconsidered in the Context of Community-Engaged Research →...

CEnR and Reconsidered Research Ethics

- It makes great sense to me that standards for ethical practice in the conduct of research should be continually under scrutiny and subject to revision; as such, revision should raise the bar for the ethical conduct of research, reflecting new knowledge about past unethical practices, and address the scope spectrum of research activities. Reflection: Proposed

Research Ethics Reconsidered

- As research moves from single subjects in the laboratory to the more natural setting of engaged community members, I believe that it is important that federal regulations reflect this

Digital Liberal Arts Collaborative

Founded in 2015, the Digital Liberal Arts Collaborative consists of a team of creative people who help the Grinnell College community develop and infuse digital resources into its scholarship, teaching, and learning.

By harnessing the entrepreneurial spirit of Grinnell faculty and students toward the meaningful incorporation of technology into the teaching and learning of the liberal arts, the Digital Liberal Arts Collaborative's goal is to assist the College in maintaining its leadership position among its peer institutions by providing a model of liberal arts education in the twenty-first century.

We provide the support, expertise, and resources that enable the College to strive toward a culture that apprehends the learning potential afforded by technologies, one in which faculty feel emboldened to experiment and play, in which students feel empowered with new skills, and in which all understand their ethical responsibilities as both digital citizens and members of a small liberal arts community.

 Panel

Abstract

By examining transnational preservation partnerships, human rights scholarship, critical engagement with humanities data, and indigenous agency in cultural heritage spaces, this panel engages ethical issues embedded in building digital libraries in diverse contexts. What drives our rationale to build? Whose knowledge is represented? Who benefits from their use?

A Beautiful African Accountability

In this African tribe, when someone does something harmful, the village where the whole tribe comes and surrounds them.

For two days, they will say to the man all the good things that he

The tribe believes that each human being comes into the world a safety, love, peace and happiness.

But sometimes, in the pursuit of these things, people make mistakes

The community sees those mistakes as a cry for help.

They unite then to lift him, to reconnect him with his true nature, fully remembers the truth of which he had been temporarily disconnected

Thanks for the interesting story, which is making the rounds on Facebook, I see. I am South African and I have never heard of this, nor of the compliment.

Shikoba is a Native American word that means 'feather'.

Can you please give your source for this story -- which African tribe is it, and where did you find the story originally, as it appears to me to be an urban myth.

Thank you

This is beautiful and all but in future may you please refrain from calling it an "African practice" and
