Once there was a king whose daughter was beautiful.
He loved her very deeply and he wished to have more.

So he cut her into pieces, and each was an astonishing daughter.
Still he wished more and he cut those pieces into pieces, and again each was a stunning girl.

He loved these so, that he cut the pieces of the pieces into pieces and he loved each of the pieces of the pieces of the pieces so he induced.

When he was all done, with love he threw all the scattered remains into the air so very high that when they fell to earth, rainbowed flowers bloomed and Cantored at his feet.
