A
dis-
play
of the normal
curve can be found in
old buildings
where feet have
rubbed away the
middle of stair steps.
Here, wounded Union
veterans pulling one foot over the new marble, wore off atoms. Men with crutches placed them firmly at an angle.
Their boots scuffed the stairs.
Those who had been refused pensions descended, while dragging feet. Today, the building, with its pillars and open space is used as a museum. Balls
may be held here;
hems of formal
gowns sweep
down the stairs.
