

An Exercise on Limits

Manya Raman-Sundström
Umeå University

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarship.claremont.edu/jhm>

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

Raman-Sundström, M. "An Exercise on Limits," Journal of Humanistic Mathematics, Volume 6 Issue 2 (July 2016), pages 229-229. DOI: 10.5642/jhummath.201602.10 . Available at: <https://scholarship.claremont.edu/jhm/vol6/iss2/20> ©2016 by the authors. This work is licensed under a Creative Commons License.

JHM is an open access bi-annual journal sponsored by the Claremont Center for the Mathematical Sciences and published by the Claremont Colleges Library | ISSN 2159-8118 | <http://scholarship.claremont.edu/jhm/>

The editorial staff of JHM works hard to make sure the scholarship disseminated in JHM is accurate and upholds professional ethical guidelines. However the views and opinions expressed in each published manuscript belong exclusively to the individual contributor(s). The publisher and the editors do not endorse or accept responsibility for them. See <https://scholarship.claremont.edu/jhm/policies.html> for more information.

An Exercise on Limits

Manya Raman Sundström

manya.sundstrom@umu.se

A man sits alone in his barn, thinking,
not about the complexities of politics, but about the real numbers, in their densities, begging to be understood.

A woman sits alone at her desk, the peace and time to return to mind, return to other people's stories, this one Bolzano's, with his clarity, his insight, his precision.

A child sits alone on the floor, the blocks stacked high, the largest one causing the tower to topple, and she, laughing now, realizing that some tasks are impossible.

We all have our limits, though some of us have not reached them, passed over them, nor had the strength to come back.

My daughter, still unaware, can still enjoy the thrill of the slide, and can protest, not understanding that to be bound, in certain ways, is to be safe.

And Bolzano, on the other side, must take some comfort in the fact that his life was not in vain, that someday even a girl like me might marvel.

To approach is not to attain, at least I know that, sitting on the edge of my own limits, my own end of possibilities.

But to approach a limit is not to be in fear of one, nor to risk thinking that convergence, by itself, is the enemy.